BACHELOR'S DEGREE IN WELLNESS MANAGEMENT

The Bachelor of Science in wellness management prepares you to design, develop, implement, and maintain health and wellness initiatives in a wide variety of settings. Nursing homes, hospitals, corporations, and government agencies have seen the effects a wellness program can have on their residents and employees, which is creating an increase in demand for wellness managers.

The major objectives of the wellness management program are understanding the major health problems that face Americans and the role that corporate and community wellness programs play in addressing these problems; planning and development of comprehensive wellness programs; establishing effective wellness programs; facilitating, teaching, and promoting wellness program content areas; managing and directing staff, facilities, and budgets of wellness programs; and applying health care economic principles to community, corporate, and hospital wellness programs.
