IV. Statement of Teaching Philosophy:

Of the various lessons I choose to impart in the course of any semester, principal among them are: 1.) tolerance and respect for opposing viewpoints; 2.) writing as a means of expression; and 3.) an appreciation for the American criminal justice system and its processes.

As an educator, I aspire to promote a learning environment in which my students may express their convictions freely. By emphasizing the fact that we are all students of the world who can learn from one another, I encourage them to engage with their fellow classmates, and to open their minds to new ideas. Facilitating lively classroom discussions, I introduce students to multiple sides of an argument. Provided the opportunity to question their own beliefs, they may come to understand why they believe what they do--and thus develop skills to form stronger written and verbal arguments.
At the college level, students are expected to express themselves in a clear and intelligent fashion. Yet, while many exhibit sufficient verbal skills, some have difficulty expressing themselves proficiently in writing. It has been my experience that practical, written exercises not only measure students' comprehension of course material, but also provide them an opportunity to improve their writing skills. Through regular feedback, extra credit incentives, and, where necessary, individual tutoring, they may exponentially improve problem areas by the semester's end.

Recognizing that students are unique individuals, who learn in a variety of different ways, I employ a multi-faceted teaching strategy to most effectively meet the needs of my class. An advocate of cooperative learning, I frequently supplement lectures, homework assignments, and required readings with small group activities and discussions. Relating abstract, theoretical principles to real world events, I facilitate a "hands on" approach to studying the crime control and due process ideologies which have governed American jurisprudence throughout history. By exploring the nexus between the past and the present, students may develop a greater appreciation for contemporary criminal justice trends.

Fundamentally, my teaching philosophy is predicated on educating my students and preparing them for life outside of the classroom. Learning to embrace diversity, to express themselves intelligently, and to appreciate the legal institutions and processes which govern their everyday existence -- these are tools that they may take with them, and apply long after the semester has gone.

V. Grading Policy, Scale and Requirements:

Students will be evaluated according to the following criteria:

A.) Mandatory Attendance and Active Participation/Class Discussions: Students must attend each class, complete reading assignments on time, and contribute positively to classroom discussions. Students will be granted two “free” absences. Subsequent missed classes will result in a lower grade.

B.) Midterm Examination: A midterm examination will be used to measure students' comprehension of course material. The test will include both multiple choice and true-false questions. Late examinations will not be administered without prior consent of the instructor.

C.) (2) Critical Thinking Activities: Students are required to complete two critical thinking exercises: a “battered woman escape plan” and a criminal profiling activity. Each assignment challenges students to “think outside the box” while demonstrating a mastery of relevant concepts, public speaking ability, and analytical skill. Late assignments will not be accepted. Specific instructions will follow.

D.) Final Examination: A final examination will be administered to assess students' mastery of the subject matter. The test will include a combination of multiple-choice, true-false, and essay-variety questions. Late exams will not be administered under any circumstances.
