

Vision for Faculty and Staff

In an age where course content is canned on a CD ROM I still believe the essence of learning is largely attributed to the climate, environment and expertise facilitated by an outstanding faculty. Two-way communication about the needs of faculty and staff must be heard and acted upon. The crisis of faculty shortages must be innovatively dealt with through collaborations with industry and other institutions of higher learning. I believe that the climate for both faculty and staff should be one of inclusion so that diversity is seen as an asset and not a new trend. I believe in a coaching style of leadership that promotes the accomplishments of all employees and works to help them in areas of professional need. I consider it a privilege to help others in reaching their professional goals.
