The Bible offers guidance in matters of morality, and it describes effective solutions to combat the problems of hunger, crime and loneliness, the sacred book Christians follow in the Christian religion. But there is more to the Bible than just religion, the Old Testament was used as a guide for a young mans life. There are also many mathematical references in the Bible.

Gematria is the use and/or study of hidden meanings through numbers. The word comes from the Greek root as geometry. Gematria was used by the Babylonians, Greeks and the Assyrians. Each letter of the Hebrew alphabet has a specific number value, and the addition of the digits gives you number. For example, the value of the word shalom (Shin, Lamed, Vav, Mem) is

$$300+30+6+600 = 936$$

There are many numbers in the Bible that carry significance and reoccur many times throughout the text. And each time the number is used it in reference to a certain topic, for example. Forty is the number of probation or trial. So many of the instances in the Bible have this special number attached to it in some way or another when they have to do with trials or probation.

Israelites wandered for forty years.

66 is the number of the “beast” or the antichrist. This means that the name of the antichrist in gematria is 666.

The Text of Genesis 1:1 is:

The sum of the values “God,” “heavens,” and “earth” is

$$86 + 395 + 296 = 777$$

A multiple of seven.

Lastly, 19 is useful in making the only magic hexagon, where the rows add up to 38 or 19×2 . In order for this to work you would need 19 hexagons

Many mathematics scholars and believers try to use the many numbers in the Bible or the Koran as proof that no man could have wrote these works, therefore it was dictated from God himself.

Does the evidence shown justify the legitimacy of the religions? Are encoded numbers and simple mathematics enough to say there is a God and the books were written by Him/Her?
