

STEPHEN PUNCH
MAJOR, AGR USAR
BIOGRAPHY

Major Stephen Punch was born and raised in Tri-Cities, WA. He is a graduate from Central Washington University, located in Ellensburg, WA and received his Regular Army Commission in June 2009. He commissioned into the Transportation Officer Corps and attended basic course at Fort Benning, GA and Transportation BOLC in Fort Eustis, VA. He spent the first three years of his career serving with the 159th Combat Aviation Brigade out of Fort Campbell, KY. Transitioning from Active Duty in 2013 and back home to Washington State is where he found a new career in the United States Army Reserves. Serving with the 364th Expeditionary Sustainment Command as an assistant plans and operations officer and staff and general assistant to Brigadier General Black eventually lent to Company Command in the Reserves. After command, he began a new full-time career as an Active Guard Reserve officer, being assigned to 108th Training Command in Beaver Dam WI. He became a graduate of the Logistics Officer Advanced course and went on to serve as a Battalion plans and operations officer within the Surface Deployment and Distribution Command. He is a graduate of Command and General Staff College and holds an Aviation management degree from his Alma Matter of Central Washington University.

His time off work is spent with his family enjoying anything outdoors, but his true passion lies in hunting and fishing with his wife and two kids. He enjoys teaching the next generation and passing down skills learned from years of tactical and operational level mission. He also enjoys being a mentor and coaching the future generations through formal schooling and tactics. Currently, working as an Assistant Professor of Military Science at Sam Houston State University, he looks forward to additional assignments and challenges throughout his career.
