Due Diligence for Due Process after Dusky: The “Dark Figure” of the Incompetent and not Restorable Defendant

It has been just over 60 years since the US Supreme Court established the modern legal standard for competency in Dusky v. United States (1960). While there have been challenges and slight revisions to this landmark case, the standard retains its precedential value. The purpose of this dissertation is to provide a legal discussion on whether current competency evaluation and the competency restoration process provide the proper due process for an incompetent defendant to stand trial.
