The purpose of this phenomenological study was to explore the experiences of international students in an English Second Language program at a Texas community college. This study utilized Schlossberg’s Transition Model as a guide to explore factors that positively influence or hinder students’ transition through developmental education.